How about hosting a Boy Scout from another country? Hosting can be a great way to learn about another culture and make a lasting bond with someone on another continent. We will be receiving other student bio's from many countries over the next several months. Please feel free to contact us with any questions or for current available AFS students.

For more information: AFS volunteer: Jenn Albright, email: jennalbright@comcast.net, phone: 717-786-6132 or fill out a hosting interest form at www.afs.org.

AFS Hosting Facts:

AFS Intercultural Programs www.afs.org is one of the world's largest community-based volunteer organizations dedicated to building a more just and peaceful world. AFS host families are people who care about youth, education and the future. Some have teenagers, others have young children or children who have already left home, or no children at all. Some host parents are married. Some are single. AFS families live on farms, in small towns, in suburbs and in city apartments. They are of all races and nationalities. They are people who are willing to take time to share with a new son or daughter. AFS families receive no pay; getting a new son or daughter is the reward! Hosting creates a lifetime friendship with another person – and often – with another family in a different part of the world. AFS students will arrive mid-August and return home mid-June.

What must we provide for our AFS participant?

Each participant should be provided with his/her own bed. Beyond that, AFS asks that each host family provide the participant with a home, integrating the participant into the life of the family. Your participant should enter fully into your daily life, including helping with household chores, etc. Your family is a central part of the participant's experience; it is where he/she gets to know the culture and lives of the host country on the deepest levels. Students have their own spending money and medical insurance.
